Ingredients Ver1

4 large leeks
2 tablespoons butter, can use olive oil
4 cloves garlic minced
2 pounds Yukon gold potatoes, washed peeled, and chopped
5 cups vegetable broth, can use chicken broth
1 teaspoon dried thyme
1 teaspoon kosher salt, more to taste
1/2 teaspoon black pepper
1/2 cup heavy cream, or more to taste
Chopped fresh chives, for garnish, optional

Instructions

With a sharp knife, cut off roots and the tough dark green part of the leeks. Slice the white and light green part of the leeks into 1/4-inch-thick slices. Place in a colander and rinse well under cold water to remove the dirt. Drain well.

In a large Dutch oven or pot, melt the butter over medium heat. Add the leeks and sauté until tender, about 8 to 10 minutes. Add the garlic and cook for 1 minute.

Add the potatoes, broth, thyme, salt, and pepper. Bring to a boil and turn the heat to low. Cover and simmer for 15 to 20 minutes, until potatoes are fork tender.

Use an immersion blender to blend the soup in the pot. Blend until smooth, but don't over blend or the soup will get gummy in texture.

Alternatively, you can blend the soup in a large blender. Let the soup cool for a few minutes before blending so it's not steaming hot. Fill the blender halfway, don't fill it any fuller or you will have an explosion. Place a towel over the top of the blender. Hold the towel in place with your hand and blend the soup. Pour pureed soup back into the pot.

Repeat with remaining soup and return to the pot. Once the soup is all blended, stir in the heavy cream. Taste and adjust salt and pepper, if necessary. Gently warm over low heat.

To serve, pour the soup into bowls and garnish with fresh chives, if desired.

Notes

If you prefer a chunky potato leek soup, you can use a potato masher instead of an immersion blender or blender to give you a chunk.

Ingredients ver2

- ½ cup salted butter (1 stick)
- 3 pounds leeks, trimmed, leaving white and light green parts only, chopped
- 1 medium yellow onion, chopped
- 4 garlic cloves, minced
- 1 teaspoon sea salt, plus more to taste
- ½ teaspoon black pepper
- ½ teaspoon garlic powder
- ½ teaspoon onion powder
- 3 sprigs fresh thyme
- 1 quart chicken stock
- 1 cup water
- 1 teaspoon chicken flavored Better Than Bouillon or 1 bouillon cube (optional)
- 1 (15-ounce) can chickpeas, drained and rinsed
- ½ cup grated Parmesan cheese, plus more for serving
- 1 cup heavy cream
- minced fresh chives or flat leaf parsley, for garnish (optional)

Method

1. Melt the butter in a large stock pot or Dutch oven over medium heat. Add the leeks, onion, and garlic and cook, stirring often, until the leeks are tender, about 10 minutes.
2. Stir in the salt, pepper, garlic powder, onion powder, thyme, chicken stock, water, bouillon, and chickpeas. Increase the heat to high and bring to a boil, then reduce the heat to medium-low and simmer for 15 minutes, or until the chickpeas are very soft.
3. Remove and discard the thyme. Use an immersion blender to blend the liquid directly in the pot until smooth. (Alternatively, transfer the liquid to the base of a blender, let cool briefly, and blend until smooth. Then return it to the pot.) Stir in the parmesan and cream, until the cream is warmed through.
4. Taste and season with salt as needed.
5. Ladle the soup into bowls and garnish with parmesan and chives or parsley, if using.
To freeze this soup, allow the soup to cool completely after blending in step 3. Store in a freezer-friendly container for up to 3 months. When ready to eat, defrost the soup in the refrigerator for 12 hours, then reheat it on the stovetop over medium. Cook through the rest of the recipe as instructed.
